

R is for Rocket

Monday 11/24/08

Do-now:

1. What would your dream job be? What are you doing now to prepare for it?

Name: Homeroom: Mr. Z.'s Science Class 11/24/08
--

Homework: Reaction paragraph

Choose one of the questions below, and write one paragraph in response to it.

- Are there things that you are excited about that could become a job you could do as an adult? Explain why you are excited about that thing and how it could become a "real job" rather than just an interest.
- In the modern world, there are always new types of jobs - computer game designers, for example - that didn't even exist in previous generations. Imagine some job you think might exist by the time you get out of college that you think would be fun to do, and explain what that job would look like.
- Bradbury, the author, is famous for the vivid imagery he uses to describe thoughts and feelings. You can see some examples in this story - the rocket and Christopher's reaction to it at the bottom of page 167, Christopher's internal "war" at the bottom of 170, his reaction to the sound of the helicopter midway through 174. Pick one description that you particularly like and explain why you like it.